13 Grant Park

"Urbs in Horto" is Chicago's motto, "City in a Garden." Although that may be hard to see in the face of so much new urban development, Chicago has a remarkable park system with more than 7,000 acres of downtown public green space.

Grant Park is Chicago's largest and most well-used space. Its 220 acres were designed according to architect Daniel Burnham's 1909 plan for Chicago and were inspired by the gardens at Versailles. Its grassy lawns host legions of picnickers, sunbathers, and the occasional protest or celebration, including President Barack Obama's 2008 Acceptance Speech, concerts such as the annual Lollapalooza Festival, and annual City festivals including Chicago Blues Fest and the Taste of Chicago.

Buckingham Fountain is the park's centerpiece and one of Chicago's most well-loved icons. At 1.5 million gallons with 150-tall jets, it is twice as large as its inspiration, Versailles' Latona Fountain. From April through October it shoots every hour on the hour. In the evening, colored lights and music make it even more magical.

38 Millennium Park

No visit to Chicago is complete without spending time in world-renowned Millennium Park. Located right on Michigan Avenue to the east of The Loop, this 24.5 acre "culture park" features stunning architecture, public art, an urban garden, and world-class performances in the Jay Pritzker Pavilion (designed by Frank Gehry), a stunning masterpiece of curled metal noticeable from blocks away. Take a photo of yourself with the skyline reflected in the shining surface of Cloud Gate, fondly known as "The Bean" to locals. Splash in Crown Fountain or spend time walking through Lurie Garden, a tribute to Chicago's motto of "City In A Garden." In summer months the park is filled with activities and performances, including the Grant Park Orchestra, whose summer residency includes daytime rehearsals open to the public and free evening performances. In fact, everything to do in Millennium Park is free and open to the public. Find a schedule of events and performances at MillenniumPark.org.
